

A Critical Analysis of Embodiment Approaches within Australian Social Work

Key dates	June 2026 to September 2026
Participants sought	To be eligible to participate, you must: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Be a qualified social worker currently practising in Australia; and • Meet the membership eligibility criteria of the Australian Association of Social Workers (AASW).
About	This study aims to better understand how social workers engage with embodiment approaches in their work, and to identify implications for education, policy and professional regulation in Australia. As an emerging area of practice, your insights and experiences will contribute to strengthening the evidence base and informing future directions for the profession.
What is involved	Participation involves a one-on-one interview (approximately 45–60 minutes), conducted either online or in person at a time convenient to you. The interview will explore your experiences, perspectives and reflections on the role of embodiment in social work practice.
How to get involved	If you would like more information or wish to take part, please contact the researcher at eramsey@csu.edu.au to request a participant information sheet and consent form. Your contribution would be highly valued in advancing understanding in this important and developing area of social work practice.
Institution and investigator contact	Elisia Ramsey (HDR Candidate) School of Social Work and Arts Charles Sturt University Wagga Wagga, N.S.W, 2650 Email: eramsey@csu.edu.au csu.edu.au